Forum Gallery in New York will be hosting an exhibition, titled 'Lowcountry: New Paintings', by artist Brian Rutenberg, on view from March 23 through May 6, 2017.

The exhibition will showcase a series of new paintings by American nature based abstract artist Brian Rutenberg (b. 1965). These new set of paintings are a reflection of artist's love for the South Carolina low country where he grew up, and his visceral obsession with the place. These new paintings, according to the artist, is not just about his nostalgia of the landscapes of coastal South Carolina, but also about his detailed expression of his journey from his birthplace to New York, or his in-depth visual experiences of the places of his visits. It establishes his belief on the concentrated power of one place, along with strong affinity towards his roots. Rutenberg's practice continuously deals around one central theme asking the question- that if it is art-making, or is it a process of manufacturing a state of lucidity?
